The storm ap-pears only to have lasted about twenty minutes, during which time Shelley's yacht must have been sunk, for upon taking a survey of the ocean on the abatement of the storm it was impossi-ble to distinguish the little schooner among the vessels that were sailing about. The night following appears to have been squally, and at daybreak Mr. Trelawny made inquiries among the crews of the vessels which had returned to harbor as to whether they could give any information about the missing

The boat, we are told, was eventually discovered off Via Reggio, having sunk in fifteen fathoms. Since nothing on board of her had been displaced, it was at once conjectured that she could not have been capsized. Moreover, many of the timbers on the starboard quarter were broken, both masts had been swept away, the bowsprit shattered, the gun-wale stove in, and the hull half full of a bluish clay. These things suggested the probability of her having been run down during the squall. That the natives were capable of committing this or any other crime the following extract from Mary Shelley's 'Journal' would go far to show: 'Wild as were the elements

The Extradition Treaties. When an offender against the laws of one country has escaped within the ju-risdiction of another, the former may demand his surrender. But as various crimes are variously regarded by different nations, this surrender is usually effected through express treaty stipula-tions. The United States has such treatles with France, Germany, Britain, Bavaria, Baden, Switzerland, Sweden, Norway, Italy, Austria, Mexico, Hayti, Nicaragua, the Dominican Republic and Verez ela The principal, if not the only, offenses for which a fugitive criminal may be reclaimed are the following: murder, or attempted murder, piracy rape, arson, perjury, forgery, embezzle-ment by public officers, burglary, and the fabrication or circulation of co feit money. In the treaties with France, Switzerland, Italy, Hayti, Venezuela, and the Dominican Republic, embezzlement is not included in the list, except when subject to "infamous punish-ment." Prussis, Bavaria, Baden, Ger-many and Hayti do not include burglary in their extradition treaties with the United States. Switzerland does not name counterfeiting. Sweden, Norway, Austria and Mexico omit the embezzle-ment of private funds. The compact of the United States with Great Britain provides for the surrender by both nations only of persons charged with the following crimes: murder, assault with intent to kill, piracy, arson, robbery and forgery. No political offense is included in extradition treaties.

Walt Whitman lately presented the Camden Home for Friendless Children with a fifty-pound pig, and a card accompanying it read as follows: "Dear children, make room for this little pig. among you.-Walt Whitman."
